Deal, 19. About eleven o'clock last night, the Pearce, Captain Stevens, from Stockholm, with iron, for Portsmouth, ran on shore on the Goodwin Sands, but was got off by the Ramsgate boats with the loss of her fore and mainmasts.

Yesterday, the House of Lords passed the East-India judicature bill.

Read a second time the bill for allowing the consecration of Bishops, subjects of other countries.

Yesterday, the House of Commons agreed to the amendments made to the shipping and navigation bill. Ordered to be engrossed.

Read a second time the bill to enable the East India Company to raise money by annuities; also the bill for the payment of duties on low wines and spirits in Scotland.

Agreed to the report of the resolutions of Friday last on the fisheries, and ordered in a bill. Also to the resolutions on the supply.

Read a second time the bill to render more effectual the act relative to inland bills of exchange, notes, &c.

Yesterday some dispatches were brought to the Marquis of Carmarthen's office from the Duke of Dorset and Mr Eden at Paris, which were sent to his Majesty at Windsor.

Last night, the new-born son of Earl Fitzwilliam was christened at his Lordship's house in Grosvenor-square. The sponsors were the Earl of Beboorough and the Earl of Mansfield; together with the Marchioness of Rockingham.

The Lord Chancellor is perfectly recovered from his late indisposition.

It was yesterday reported upon 'Change, that the King of Portugal had been seized with repeated fits of what the Faculty term Lipthymia, and that he expired on the 23d of last month, though his death had not been publicly announced by the Court.

Yesterday came on in the Court of Common Pleas, before Lord Loughborough and a special jury, the trial of the important action brought by Mr Fox against Mr Corbett, the High Bailiff of Westminster, for maliciously withholding a return, after a clear majority of incontestible votes appeared on the poll in favour of Mr Fox. The trial lasted from noon till nine o'clock in the evening, and in the course of the evidence and pleadings, the whole of the late violent party struggle was revived. The council Philips, Mr Garrow, and Mr Adair, after opening the case, which the latter did with his maiden speech, called Mr Cocker and Mr O'Brian as witnesses to prove the facts, laid in the indictment, that Mr Corbett refused to make a return agreeable to the duty of his office, and as the statute directed. Mr Cocker said, that in the course of the scrutiny, the sum of 2200 l. passed through his hands, which was expended upon that business. Mr Mingay, Mr Serjeant Walker, and Mr Wood, were on the part of the defendant; the former strongly argued against the case as laid, by the plaintiff, and brought Mr Grojan to prove that it was impossible for Mr Corbett to make any other return than that which he did, consistent with the oath which he had taken, for it was impossible for him to decide who had the majority of legal votes. Mr Erskine made a most able reply. Lord Loughborough, with his usual correction and impartiality, went into all the evidence very minutely, and submitted to the Jury the propriety of finding a verdict for the plaintiff. The Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff with Two Thousand Pounds damages.

We have purposely avoided entering into the very long question in this trial, since it is a repetition of that which was so often the discussion of Parliament. It is important, not so much from the sum of damages given, as that it ascertains a great doctrine in the constitution, and sets us free from the very partial discretion of a returning officer. This decision only was wanting to make Mr Fox's triumph in Westminster complete.

The sum of money given by the verdict of the jury, Mr Fox declared he should distribute among the charities of Westminster.

Mr Hastings has purchased Beaumont Lodge, near Windsor, late the property of Mr Watts, for 12,000 l.

The Directors of the East India Company and the Board of Control, lately established by act of Parliament, do not cordially draw together, the latter having interfered in some business which the former had in agitation, and which they had not an idea was in the meaning of the act; this has caused a little hubbub in Leadenhall-street, and some gentlemen of respectable characters appear determined to know exactly the true situation of the Company, urging the hardship of being responsible for measures which are directed by an invisible power.

The subscription for the increase of the capital of the East India stock is to commence next month; and the 1,200,000 l. additional East India annuities are to be brought to sale in August next.

Nothing more is to be done respecting the Crown lands this year, than to appoint a Commission to report the state of them next year; and it will be two years before any part of them can be brought to sale.

It is reported there has been some misunderstanding between the new settlers of Nova Scotia, and a party of Americans, subjects of the United States, but that both the English Governor and the American Legislature had harmoniously joined to settle the dispute.

An additional number of troops is to be sent to Canada, to strengthen Oswego, and the other forts upon the boundary line, which the Americans are attempting to wrest from us, ministry being wisely determined not to make a tame surrender of them to a rabble, who have no national authority for the enterprise which they have undertaken.

Mr Jenkinson appears no more in the House of Commons. His patent of creation to the Peerage is now in the office, and will of course appear in a short time in the Gazette.

It is now said to be positively settled, that Lord Walsingham goes to Spain.

We have authority to say, that the commercial treaty with France is in such forwardness as leaves it beyond all doubt of being speedily adjusted, and we have the pleasure to add, much to the interest of this country.

DUTY ON SCOTCH COALS.

"The order of the day was read for going into a Committee on the duty on coals carried coastways in North Britain; and Mr Beaufoy moving the said order, the Speaker quitted the chair, and the whole House resolved itself into a Committee accordingly, Sir Harry Houghton in the chair.

"Mr Beaufoy observed, that it was the duty of Parliament to give every encouragement to industry; and that in Scotland there were three material branches for the employment of the natives. He first instanced agriculture, in which, he said, they were very much checked by the barrenness of the land. He then took notice, that many manufactories were much distressed for want of fuel, having nothing but peat in many parts of Scotland as a substitute. He then took a view of the fisheries, and shewed the advantages that might be derived from it, by the erecting of the several towns and villages about to be established for the purpose of the fisheries on the northern coasts, and, for the encouraging of which, the duty, he was of opinion, ought to be taken off such coals as should be carried coastways. He said, that, in the course of the last twelve years, upwards of 6000 persons had emigrated from Scotland, and that at least 3000 more were about to leave their country, unless those fishing towns should receive that encouragement they were entitled to expect from Parliament. He said, that this would not be a repeal of the duty on coals, but only a commutation, as the people would be obliged to raise an equivalent sum in their own way on the produce of the fishery, or in whatever manner they might think proper. The Hon. member then moved, "That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the duty on coals carried coastways be ceased and determine for a limited time."

"Mr Brett said, that, understanding this exemption of duty was not to be confined merely to the fisheries, but extended to the coast of Scotland in general, he should give the resolution his negative.

"Sir Adam Ferguson said, that, from the words of the motion, it certainly meant that the duty should cease even in all the counties; but that this was only moved as a resolution, and, when reported to the House, the exemption of duty, he said, might be confined to the fisheries. For his part, he withheld the exemption of duty might be extended to all the coast of England as well as Scotland; for he thought it very hard and unjust, that one part should be made to pay a large impost on a commodity, merely because it did not grow in it, but in another part, from which they were obliged to have it. He concluded with promising his support to the resolution.

"The Attorney-General agreed with the worthy Baronet on the cruelty of making one part of the country pay an impost for articles that grew in another, and, but for the lateness of the season, thought a bill to rectify it might be highly necessary. He said, that if the Minister should be asked, why he did not give up the impost? his answer would be, that the exigencies of the state would not admit of it; but as, in the case of the northern coasts, an equivalent was to be had, he agreed to the resolution.

"Sir Edward Ashley observed how very unequal the charge of coals was in different parts, and wished much that it should be equalized.

"Mr Josse promised his support, and thought the matter should be general; for that the city of London paid 260,000 l. more than any other part of the Kingdom.

"Mr Dempster was of the same opinion, and held it equally cruel and impolitic, that one part should pay a large impost for an article, merely because it grew, or was to be found only, in another. He said, it so happened in Scotland, that, near all the capital towns, rich coals were to be found; and that the exemption of duty to those on the coasts should not be a ground of jealousy to England, because, in all the great towns, except Aberdeen, they had very good and rich coals at hand.

"Mr Brett said a few words; after which the resolution was read and agreed to, and ordered to be reported to-morrow; and the House then adjourned.

On Tuesday last, Lady Maxwell of Monreith, was safely delivered of a daughter at Merton.

On Saturday last, the wife of Absalom Bluit, dancing-master in Kelfo, was delivered of her eleventh child in twelve years. By a former wife he had twenty children in twenty-one years, being thirty-one children in all, viz. 24 sons and 7 daughters, all single births, of whom three only are living. The distress of Mr Bluit and his family has induced the ladies and gentlemen of that town to subscribe to a Charity Ball for their relief.

On Monday last, died at Lanark, in an advanced period of life, Mr Robert Thomson, rector of the grammar-school of that burgh; a gentleman esteemed and beloved by all his friends and acquaintances. His wife, who has been many years dead, was sister to Mr Thomson, the well-known author of the Seasons.

Yesterday was apprehended here, and incarcerated by warrant of the Sheriff, May Craigie, formerly advertised in this paper, as being suspected of setting fire to the gardener's house, and afterwards attempting to set fire to the mansion-house of Lethendy.

And at this meeting the Governors and Directors for the ensuing year are to be chosen.

Further Particulars respecting Mr FITZGERALD.

After sentence of death was pronounced upon Mr Fitzgerald, he addressed the Court as follows:—

"My Lords,

"I humbly hope for the humane indulgence of this Court, to my present most unhappy situation. I do not mean, my Lords, to take up your time; but I trust that what I shall say will be attended with effect. The very short period of time that has elapsed since my conviction has been taken up in adjusting my temporal affairs; and in truth, my Lords, even these are not yet perfectly settled: but I now wish to make some preparation, some settlement of peace with Heaven, before I pass into the presence of an all-seeing and justly offended God, which I am about to do.

"My Lords, you may be led to imagine that I plead for this indulgence of time in hopeful expectation of obtaining his Majesty's pardon; but, my Lords, I do most solemnly declare it is no such inducement; for, if his Majesty were to offer me his pardon, nay his Crown along with it, I would not accept of either the one or the other; under the weight of such a verdict against me, it is impossible I could ever look one of the community in the countenance, or again hold up my head in society. Let it not be understood, my Lords, that by this declaration I insinuate or infer the smallest degree of censure on the verdict of the Jury. No, my Lords, I know them all to be gentlemen of the most fair and irreproachable characters; men not to be biased, and who could not avoid bringing me in guilty if I were their brother, from the body of evidence that has appeared against me—which, if I was before acquainted with, I should have endeavoured to have witnesses to repel that body; but that, my Lords, is not now a matter for consideration—the only thing I plead for is time.

"It is also said, my Lords, that I want that time to commit an act of suicide; but I have too many offences on my back, and dreadful crimes to account for, to have such a miserable passport into eternity."

Here he ended his speech; and the Chief Baron, with tears in his eyes, recapitulated the rigour of the law, and his duty as a Judge, observing, that the unfortunate Mr M'Donnell had been sent into eternity without a moment's warning: That after sentence of death had been passed, and the order for execution, it was not in the power of the Court to interfere, and his request must rest with the humanity of the Sheriff.

The causes of the quarrel between Fitzgerald and M'Donnell, which terminated in both their deaths, was as follows:—Two ladies held a farm under Mr M'Donnell; the lease expired, and as the land had been set at a very low rent, and he was a considerable gainer by the fall of the lease, he refused to renew it. Fitzgerald interfered, and insisted he should; he even went so far as to take possession for the ladies. The former applied to the laws for redress; many encounters ensued, and many attempts were afterwards made to assassinate Mr M'Donnell, until the catastrophe of the 21st of February.

Among the many horrid circumstances circulated relative to the ill-fated Fitzgerald, is the following:—He had, it seems, a trusty servant, whom he acquainted with his secrets, and who faithfully executed all his commissions. At length the man had waded through so much iniquity, that he began to relent, and visibly betrayed some marks of compunction. Fitzgerald, being conscious that the man knew too much, he from that moment determined to make away with him. Accordingly he caused liquor to be sent to the kitchen, and when he judged the servants might be heated with drinking, he entered in person, and soon contrived to create a quarrel between this man and another. They proceeded to fight, but he asked them, were they afraid to take pistols? The fellow whose death Fitzgerald had fixed on, as might be naturally expected from one of such a disposition, replied, he was not. The other seemed to show some reluctance, but Fitzgerald instantly whispered him, that his opponent's pistol should only be charged with powder. Pistols were then brought, Fitzgerald was as good as his word, and at the third fire the unfortunate man was shot through the body. Thus, apparently through a frolic, he was able to annihilate a man whose existence he had reason to dread.

Much of this dreadful complexion is the transaction related by Scots Andrew. One Renny, a servant of Fitzgerald, and a reputed natural son of his father's, was commissioned to shoot Ch. L. Fitzgerald, Fitzgerald's own brother. He accordingly met the devoted object, but whether from the impulse of nature, (being his own natural brother) or whether from a sense of the atrociousness of the deed, is not known; he did not fire, although provided with a case of pistols for the purpose. He returned to Fitzgerald, and told him that he had snatched both pistols at his brother, but they did not go off, and that afterwards he began to relent, and desisted. Fitzgerald finding he began to waver, replied, that he "was extremely glad he had not shot him, as he was in a passion when he gave him the orders, which had now subsided." He then took the pistols from him, told him to go into the garden, and he would follow him. He accordingly did in a few minutes, where he met Renny coming up to him, as Scots Andrew asserts. He said, "So these pistols misfired! They were not used for to do; I'll try them with you," putting the pistol to the man's ear, and shooting him through the head—He then, with the assistance of Scots Andrew, buried him in the garden, (at Terenure, in this county, where Fitzgerald then resided). In order to remove any suspicion from Renny's non-appearance, he advertised him in the public papers, as having run away from his service. Scots Andrew only desired that the garden might be searched, and he was willing to forfeit his life if the body was not found.

These lands lie contiguous in the parishes of Riccarton and Galston, and county of Ayr.—They consist of about 3100 acres Scots measure, of very good arable and meadow ground; in the close neighbourhood of the thriving town of Kilmarnock, and have three great roads passing through them.—The present free rent, after deduction of the land-tax, and every other annual burden, is 1862 l. Sterling, exclusive of the coal, which, at an average of some years past, although wrought under great disadvantages, owing to the competition of some neighbouring collieries, has yielded from 70 l. to 80 l.—There is coal, lime, and free-stone in several parts of the estate, and a fire engine has been lately erected upon one very extensive and valuable field of coal.—There are about 60 acres of wood, of which about 20 acres are now fit for cutting, and some grown timber over the estate to a considerable value.—The tenants are substantial; the farm houses in good repair; and the farms are all inclosed and subdivided with full grown hedges, which are ample fences.—The tacks have not many years to run, and at their expiry there must be a very considerable increase of rent, without any expense to the proprietor.—The valued rent is 1754 l. 4 s. 1 d. which, with some old returns, affords five freehold qualifications.—And the proprietor has an heritable right to the teinds of the whole estate, excepting one inconceivable farm, the teinds of which are valued.

LANDS IN STIRLINGSHIRE.

TO be SOLD by roup, within the Exchange Coffeehouse (A. Ramsay's), Edinburgh, on Wednesday the 9th day of August 1786, between the hours of five and six afternoon.

THE Lands of Orchardhead, lying in the parish of Bothkennar, and county of Stirling; the rent, after conversion of victual, including a small feu-duty, and deducting public burdens, is 233 l. 17 s. 11 d. 2-12ths Sterling, holding of the Crown; and, being valued at 421 l. 19 s. 2 d. The situation of the estate is eligible, and may be very profitable to the purchaser, as it is within four miles of Falkirk, in the neighbourhood of Carron-shore and the Carron-works, having the Forth to the North and East, and the Great Canal to the South. It commands a delightful prospect of the adjacent country, and of the shore and towns on the opposite coast.
